Break For West U.P. Deer

10 Public Deer Yard Tours Scheduled In U.P. During March

Guided tours of deer yards in the Upper Peninsula to give the public an inside look at the winter habits of whitetails are scheduled by the Michigan Conservation Department on March 20 and 21.

The "show me" trips on March 20 are scheduled from the Ottawa Sportsmen's Club near Baraga and from conservation department equipment stations at Gribble, Felch, Stephens and Sault Ste. Marie and at the department's fish hatchery at Thompson near Marquette.

Meeting places for the March 21 trips will be the Iron River Agency and the department's equipment station at Hackettfield, the Quins Wildlife Experiment Station at Shingleton and the department's district headquarters at Neshanicum.

The tour getting under way from the Quins station will be especially directed at providing legislators with a "deer's eye view" of winter deer conditions, said. It also will be open to the general public.

Starting time for all of the Upper Peninsula excursions will be 1 p.m. In the event of bad weather, indoor feeding sessions will be conducted at each of the meeting places.

The tours will be held out to show people what deer do and don't eat during the winter. Department field men will also give out signs of overbreeding by whitetails and explain the importance of this problem in deer management.

No Reservation Needed

In addition, the field trips will take in areas where the department and commercial loggers have carried out the new outings to serve up supplemental winter food rations for deer.

Deer considered as "house" for deer yard tours include field ranches, waterpooled footgear and warm but light outdoor. Transportation arrangements will be left up to each individual on touring party.

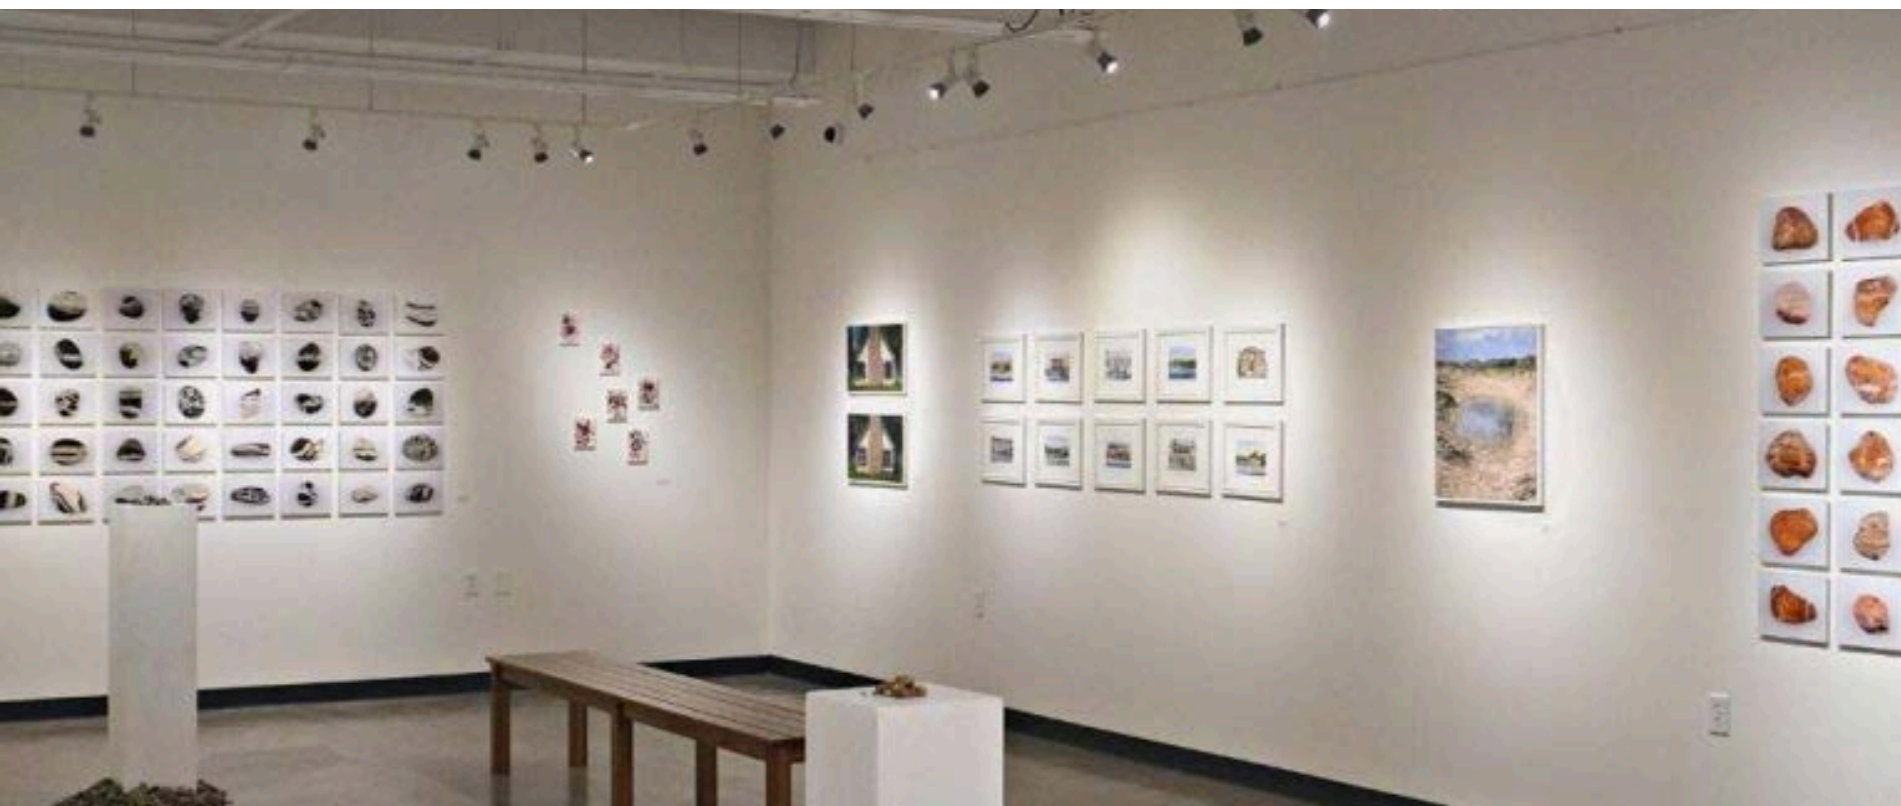

No reservations are needed to join the tours.
